NEWS OF LATEST HAPPENINGS IN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

COUNTY MAY BUILD LIBRARY BUILDING

Structure Seems Assured as Arlington Officials Approve Plan.

PUPILS' HEALTH RATINGS

ARLINGTON COUNTY,
BUREAU OF PUBLICITY.
Tel. Clar. 329. Clarendon, Va.

With the approval of the county authorities to the plan as proposed by the sponsors of the Arlington District Library for a county-owned building, a modernly equipped library building in the vicinity of Clarendon, it was learned yesterday, appears assured.

The library which was organized seven years ago through efforts of the Woman's Civic Club of Clarendon, has grown from one small room to one today having more than 4,500 books. The library opened with quarters in the Clarendon Community Hall and after two years, having outgrown the room, moved to an office room located on Clarendon Circle, where it stayed until last April. With books in the cellar of the building and on the floor, it was necessary to seek larger quarters. Its present home is at the intersection of Virginia avenue and Wilson boulevard.

According to officials of the library, it is anticipated that before the lease on the present building expires in April of next year that a site will have been found upon which the county will erect a modern library building and give Arlington District a library building which will compare with that of Jefferson District.

The library, it was stated, has been financed through the cooperation of a number of religious and civic organizations, but the move for a county-owned building was determined upon by those that have made the library possible as it is felt that the county should help Arlington District bear the expense as the library located in Jefferson district is not required to pay any rent for the building.

It was pointed out that when the new building is provided the library will be divided into departments—the children's section, one for the adults and another where all reference books will be found.

A feature which has been added is the amendment to the constitution now effective which provides for sustaining membership which is not confined to any community but is countywide.

Airplane Pilot Gives Alarm on Forest Fire

Scenic airplanes flying overhead is an everyday occurrence to residents of Fairfax County, but receiving messages from them is upcurrence. Yesterday morning J. H. Wells, a telephone lineman working on a pole near Clifton Station, Va., noticed a plane keep circling over the village, the pilot finally dropping something over the side. The object fell near Wells, and on investigation he found it contained a note, which read:

Aircraft Squadron, East Coast Expedition, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., cooperating with the Virginia Forest Service, Forest Warden, 1:15-3:45. There is a fire four miles south of you (Clifton Station) in Prince William County. K. H. Hollis, pilot. Please report to the nearest Forest Warden."

Wells immediately obtained his portable telephone set and notified the Fairfax telephone operator who got in touch with the proper authorities and men were dispatched to the scene of the fire from Manassas.

MAYOR OF LAUREL FIGHTS AUTO CASE

He Claims State Roads Body Has No Jurisdiction in Town Limits.

JURY TRIAL IS ASKED

Contending that the State Road Commission has no authority over roads in Laurel, J. H. Petty, mayor of that town, yesterday asked for a jury trial on the charge of illegal parking. Petty was arrested about ten days ago by a commission cop, but by an employe of the commission. It was alleged that the mayor had refused to move his car, which was parked on the line of Montgomery, Main and Washington streets, within the town limits of Laurel.

When he appeared before Police Court Judge J. Chew Sheriff yesterday Petty, through his counsel, George P. McCeney, moved that the warrant be quashed. Town authorities have been in the habit of parking regulations inside the town limits, McCeney argued. Judge Sheriff overruled the motion. McCeney then asked a jury trial before the circuit court, which was granted. The case will come up at the April term.

Right-of-way for a sidewalk in front of its property has been deeded to the town of Laurel by the Maryland State Roads Commission, and the commission has also agreed to pay sixty cents per square yard for paving. This means that work on the walkway will begin again in the near future.

Right of way had been procured from 21 landowners along Broad Laurel avenue, between Jonson and Montgomery avenues except from the commission and a gasoline station. No sidewalk will be laid in front of the latter place at this time, due to the failure to get the land.

Work on the walk already has begun, but the contractor was stopped when difficulties were met in getting the agreement of the abutting property owners.

HEAVY SENTENCES ARE HANDED THREE

Despite Guilty Pleas, Judge Deals Severely With Montgomery Trio.

BOY GIVEN FOUR YEARS

Stiff sentences were meted out in three cases in assessment of County Circuit Court, at Rockville, yesterday by Judge Robert B. Peter. The sentences were considered unusually severe inasmuch as all three defendants entered pleas of guilty, and it is usually the practice to take such pleas into consideration.

William Lake, 17 years old, of Takoma Park, Md., who pleaded guilty to highway robbery with a dangerous weapon, was sentenced to four years in the House of Correction, despite a determined effort by prominent citizens to secure a lightening of the sentence. He was arrested within a few hours of the time he is alleged to have committed the robbery, by Sergt. Earl H. Burdine, of the Maryland State Police, Montgomery County police.

Lake is alleged to have held up Isaacs M. Vaspien, a student of the Washington Missionary College, Takoma Park, at the point of a pistol, and to have taken from him $30 on the grounds of the Washington Sanitarium and Hospital.

Harry Gingher of a four-month hunt. He was employe of the head cook at Washington's most exclusive apartment-hotels.

Murphy pleaded guilty to having obtained positions as salesman with several retail houses and to having taken goods sold upon consignment and then to have sold them and retained the money. The sums are alleged embezzlements to four cases in February and he was arrested February 9.

Rockville and its vicinity was in darkness last night for nearly half an hour shortly after 5 o'clock, when a transformer at Veirs Mill avenue and Montgomery avenue burned out. Supper preparations in Rockville homes were interrupted and candle light was the order.

THE ONCE OVER

By H. I. PHILLIPS

FROM JAIL TO JOURNALISM.

Baltimore, Nov. 16.—A class in journalism has been opened in the Maryland State Penitentiary. Eleven convicts, including one murderer, are studying to be newspaper men.—Newspaper Item.

WELL, the experiment, if successful, should at least assure managing editors a more interesting reply when they ask applicants, "What have you done?"

* * * *

But it's a pretty depressing item. The penitentiary part is bad, but according to reports, the school of journalism output is quite disturbing.

* * * *

What could move a prison inmate to want to become a newspaper man is something of a mystery. Possibly it's the discovery that many writers are getting away with murder.

* * * *

IF the Baltimore convicts matriculate, they may see some exciting moments around the managing ed's desk. For instance:

Convict—Stick 'em up!

Managing Editor—What's the matter?

Convict—Don't make a move till I get over the staff.

Managing Editor—But what's the idea?

Convict—I want a newspaper job.

Managing Editor—Do you want inside work?

Convict — No thanks! I've had plenty.

Managing Editor—I mean, have you ever done much with the pen?

Convict—I've done plenty in the pen, if not with it.

Managing Editor—Is it your desire to take a newspaper business your life work?

Convict (considering)—Don't use that word "life."

Managing Editor—Have you ever done any imaginative writing?

Convict—No, but I'm sure I could.

Managing Editor—What makes you so sure?

Convict—All the judges I've ever faced have said my stories were unbelievable.

Managing Editor—Perhaps we could use you as a makeup man.

Convict (firmly)—When I want to spend my life at hard labor I'll go back to the laundry.

Managing Editor—How would you like to be a dramatic critic?

Convict—Not unless I could get a pardon after two years.

Managing Editor—Well, what would you say to doing a newspaper column?

Convict (with a deeply hurt look)—One more threat like that and I'll blow your head off!

* * * *

THE possibilities are intriguing. However, one thing is fairly certain: after a prison graduate lands on a metropolitan newspaper and finds that the telephone booths in which he may spend most of his life are even smaller than a cell, he will volunteer to go back to jail.

Danville, Va., Nov. 24.—For the first time since the Danville textile strike was declared on December 28, the deep-throated whistle of the Dan River Mills sounded today and workers poured into the plants. It was estimated that about 2,000 workers entered the mills, union pickets admitting that it was the greatest number since the labor dispute began.

Many of the workers went on foot fearlessly passing the pickets and the groups of mill workers, who under-took neither verbal nor physical provocation. Three extra street cars took workers home in Danville and Schoolfield.

The mill management offered no comment on the changed situation, and no word came from the union leaders. The increased force enabled the starting up of one of the large mills which has been idle since the strike began. It is believed that overseers and superintendents for the past two weeks have been busy and workers eager to resume operations and that this morning was set for the time for them to report.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, yesterday appealed for aid for the striking textile workers at Danville, Va.

"There is hunger and suffering existing among the textile workers and their families at Danville, Va.," he said. "Many of them have been for months without food, adequate clothing and shelter. This is the sacrifice they are making for the cause of trade unionism, for decent wages, the exercise of their rights to join a labor union and bargain collectively.

"Shall they be starved into submission? Shall their children perish, perhaps die from hunger and lack of clothing?"
